Do you love art and ideas?

UQ Art Museum fosters an environment of learning and enquiry.

“UQ Art Museum is a collecting institution with a profoundly educational purpose. Our programs link closely with curriculum areas and are enriched by our engagement with the University and external communities.”

Dr Campbell Gray, Director, UQ Art Museum

EXHIBITIONS

UQ Art Museum draws upon the talents of the University and broader community to develop thought-provoking exhibitions and public programs that are thesis-driven, relevant and influential.

CONSERVATION

UQ Art Museum is custodian of one of the significant public art collections in Queensland. Featuring artwork from the colonial era through to contemporary Australian art, our active conservation program ensures the collection will remain a significant part of Australia’s cultural heritage into the future.

EDUCATION

“Visual art transcends disciplines. Many artworks and artists are exploring the same questions that are being investigated by students in the classroom and researchers in the lab.”

Dr Campbell Gray, Director, UQ Art Museum

The UQ Art Museum provides a vibrant hub for participatory and inclusive learning experiences. Our team works with academics across multiple disciplines – from humanities and health to the sciences and engineering – to enrich student learning.

UQ Art Museum also creates pathways for students who seek a career in the visual arts and museum sector through supervised industry placements and internships.

“For an aspiring curator, receiving a bursary to spend a month working in the UQ Art Museum undoubtedly changed the trajectory of my career. I helped develop an exhibition with curators and learnt so much from the registrars working with the University’s art collection. This experience gives me an incredible advantage.”

Emily Poore, Don Tugby Art Museum Bursary recipient

UQ ART COLLECTION

The University of Queensland Art Collection comprises more than 3,500 artworks by significant Australian artists. More than 60 per cent of the UQ Art Collection has been acquired through private philanthropy.

We facilitate gifts of artworks through the Australian Government’s Cultural Gifts Program, welcome donations towards the purchase of artworks in liaison with our curatorial staff, and are also supported by individuals wishing to leave a legacy in their wills.
